AGUINALDO.

A Close Range Study of the Filipino Dictator—A Man of Great Intelli-gence, but Swelled up to an Exaggerated Importance.

Joseph L. Stickney in the Chicago

Record: Having been on terms of friendly association with General Aguinaldo and his staff during the last half of May and the whole of June, I had an opportunity to get some idea of the man who is to-day one of the most important individual factors in our dealings with the Filipinos.

Emilio Aguinaldo, now about 29 years Emilio Aguinaldo, now about 23 years old, is a man of an intelligence far beyond that of the most of his people. He comes of a good family in the province of Cavite, near Manila, where he was elucated and where he entered the bar. He joined the insurgents immediately after the outbreak of the rebellion in the latter part of 1896, but it was not until after the execution of Dr. Rizal that he became one of the leaders of the revolt. The blockade maintained by the Spanish squadron in Philippine waters against the importation of arms for the insurgents gradually drove the Filipinos to the wall, and in December, 1897, the celebrated "pacification" of the islands was negotiated, the gobetween being Senor Pedro Paterno, director of the Manila museum, a Filipino, but he at this time was composed of Emilio Aguinaldo, who exercised such executive powers ag were possible to such a feeble organization; Senor Artacho, home secretary; Senor Montenegro, foreign secretary; Vito Bilarmino, war secretary, and Baldomero Aguinaldo, secretary of the dreasury. The so-called "pacification" consisted in a purchase of the insurgent leaders for the sum of $500,000 (Mexican), equal to about $400,000 ( old. Aguinaldo and his associates afreed to surrender, all the arms in the possession of the natives and to quit the archipelago, remaining away at the pleasure of the Spanish authorities, and to disarm all the insurgent forces. Aguinaldo was to go to Hong-Kong to receiving Aguinaldo sat the money had been paid, Artacho was to dissolve the linsurgent organization, disband the troops and give up the, arms. This part of the programme was carried out in December, 1897, or the early part of January, 1898.

The cash payment was divided among the junta, and Aguinaldo started for Paris. He got no further than Singaold, is a man of an intelligence far beyond that of the most of his people. He

The cash payment was divided among the junta, and Aguinaido started for Paris. He got no further than Singapore, however, when the destruction of the Maine in Havana harbor brought on an acute tension of the relations between the United States and Spain, and he remained in Singapore to see whether the Filipinos might not profit by the difficulties of Spain. It was then that occurred the negotiations with our worthy representative, Consul Pratt, which, Aguinaido now claims, in part justify his assertion that the United States made an alliance with him by which he was to assist in expelling the Spanlards from the Philippines, and in return the United States was to recognize the independence of Filipino republic. It is, of course, impossible to tell how big a fool an American consul is capable of being, but developments at Singapore and Hong Kong lead to the belief that the record has recently been advanced a long distance. No one need suppose, however, that Senor Aguinaldo was deceived as to the authority of a mere consul to bind our government. He is altogether too shrewd and too well read to have any illusions, though, of course, now it suits his game to set up the claim that his return to Cavite was due to the solicitations and arguments of our consular repreto Cavite was due to the solicitations and arguments of our consular representatives.

To show how well he has studied the

To show how well he has studied the situation, let me recall a conversation he had with General Anderson, who commanded the first detachment of our troops that, landed at Cavite, June 20, last. It should be remembered that Aguinaldo had probably never regarded the United States as anything more than a geographical expression until within five months preceding this conversation, for no one had ever thought of the possibility of our interference with the future of the Philippine archipelago.

Aguinaldo at his second and third speingo.

Aguinaldo at his second and third meeting with General Anderson, asked him point blank whether the United States had any intention of treating the Philippines as colonies. As General Anderson had no orders and no authority to reveal the policy of the United States, he replied that he could not answer that question; but, he added, the United States had been a nation for more than 110 years without colonies; and Aguinaldo could judge for himself whether our government would try to colonize a distant territory at this late date. "That is true," replied Aguinaldo, "and besides I have read the constitution of the United States very carefully, and I cannot find in it any provision for colonies."

As I sald before, no one need imagine that Senor Aguinaldo was under any hallucination as to the powers of a consult to pledge the faith of his government. It is probable that he knew the duties and Binitations of our amateur diplomats in Singapore and Hong-Kong even better than they did.

sul to pledge the faith of his government. It is probable that he knew the dutles and limitations of our amateur diplomats in Singapore and Hong-Kong even better than they did.

When it was evident that war was only a question of days, Aguinaldo went from Singapore to Hong-Kong, hoping to arrive in time to see Admiral Dewey, but he was several days too late. As there he people who confidently assert that Aguinaldo piloted Commodore Dewey's flagship into Manila bay, the night before the battle, it may be as well to say that neither Aguinaldo nor any other Filipino was on board the Olympia at the time. Moreover, the only one of his followers with the fleet was a man whom the commodore took along as an interpreter in case he should fall in with any Filipino fishermenor boatmen from whom he might want to get information before entering Manila bay.

Three of these men—Teodoro Sandico, A. G. Medina, and T. Alejandrino—dame to the fleet before the commodore sailed from Mirs bay, and one of them was taken abourd the storeship Zaffro. As this vessel was the list vessel in the line on entering Manila bay, he was not lir a position to do any piloting even if he had been capable of such work, which he was not.

General Aguinaldo sailed from Hong-flong for Manilla bay in the dispatch beat McCulloch May 17 last. He landed in Cavite on the 19th. As I accompaded him from Hong-Kong and was able to be by name service to blim, I was received at his headquarters with great condaility until after the arrival of the first detachment of troops. About that the Aguinaldo began to think he was a great man, and as he was tiresome and often ridiculous when trying to live up to his own estimate of himself, I saw less and less of him. He took possession of one of the numerous abandoned houses in Cavite, and at first he acted with great good judgment and simplicity. In a day or two the natives flocked into Cavite in droves, and as a small steamer arrived from Hons-Kong laden with arms and ammunition, in a week there were more than 1,000 men ready to take the field against the Spaniards in Cavite province. On the night of May 26 Aguinaldo sent 600 men across the bay of Bakor in canoes. This force was attacked by 300 Spaniards on the morning of the 28th, and all the latter were captured. Sharp and continuous fighting continued for a week during which, after having succeeded in witnessing the fighting for two days without Aguinaldo's consent or assistance. I obtained from him a guide and a passport which enabled me to go intibatile with more comfort and less risk. The capture of Imus, with four Krupp field guns; the powder magazine, where a large amount of greatly needed powder fell into the insurgents hands; Bakor church, Novaleta, and finally Cavite Vielo, gave Aguinaldo complete control of all the country south of Manila and its immediate suburbs. Thereafter, though there was aferce firing, night after night, on the rebel advance along the bay shore, the Spaniards never made a real stand until they had fallen back to the fort at Malate and the blockhouses close to the city of Manila ltself.

When Manila was fairly invested by the insurgents, Aguinaldo's ideas of his own importance and power underwent a very apparent expansion. He had been obliged to quit Cavite, as our troops needed the town; but he moved his headquarters to Bakor, and there he was as inaccessible to ordinary mortals as if he had been the emperor of China. Anyone who expects Aguinaldo to make gross blunders in dealing with our people, will probably be disappointed.

Anyone who expects Aguinaldo to make gross blunders in dealing with our Anyone who expects Aguinaldo to make gross blunders in dealing with our people, will probably be disappointed. He is an exceptionally shrewd man. He is of the distinctly Japanese type in appearance, having the broad, square forehead, which betokens intellect, reenforced by the bumps in the back of his head, which indicate the endurance and persistence of a strong animalism. He has rather large eyes, set wide apart, and a straight but sensual nose. His lips are full and his chin round and not determined. His height is about 5 feet 4 inches, and he carries himself very erect. His color is a light chocolate. He speaks and writes Spanish and Tagalog, the native language of the island of Luzon. He understands English fairly well, although he always made a pretense of not being able to speak or comprehend it. I had reason for believing that he could have held all his conversation with us in English without an interpreter if he had, wished to do so.

Primary western market receipts were 625,000 bushels against 367,000 bushels last year. The Atlantic port clearances of wheat and flour amounted to 581,000 bushels. Reports were current that freight room had been engaged at Boston for shipments of 1,500,000 bushels wheat and while that was said to have, a weakening effect upon Liverpool it helped to stiffen the market here. It had been expected that Bradstreets would make an increase of world's stock for the week of about 2,000,000 bushels and consequently when the report was issued showing a total increase of but 217,000 bushels, the disappolatment of the bears was shown in increased buying in of shorts.
